FILM SCREENING MONDAY'S GIRLS

This film explores the conflict between modern individualism and traditional communities in West Africa, through the eyes of two young women from the Niger delta. Although both come from leading families in the same large island town, Florence looks at the women's initiation (irabo) as an honour, while Azikiwe, who has lived in the city for ten years, sees it as an indignity.

Monday's Girls looks at various standpoints of gendered identities, women having control over their bodies, traditional versus modernity and the shattered expectations of parents
